Carpet Grass, the Most Important Grass for Permanent Pasture in the Coastal Plain of the South.

Carpet Grass is the most important grass for permanent pasture in the Coastal Plain area of the South. Carpet grass is not a native grass, but was accidentally introduced from tropical America before 1830 and has spread generally over the Southern States.

Carpet grass requires a moist or at least not droughty soil and succeeds better in such soils if sandy than any other pasture grass. The minimum temperature it will survive is about 10 degrees F.

Carpet grass pastures are readily established in tilled land by seeding at any time from early spring to late summer on a well-firmed seed bed, when moisture conditions are favorable. On unbroken or stump land good results can be secured by burning or mowing the tall native grasses, seeding at a favorable time, and then pasturing to keep the native grasses constantly short. Under this treatment the native grasses are eradicated in one or two years and replaced by a pure stand of carpet grass.

The carrying capacity of good carpet grass pasture is one cow to the acre for five best months and one cow to 2 acres for three to five months longer.

Dallis grass, lespedeza, white clover, bur clover, black medic, and Augusta vetch are desirable in mixture with carpet grass. Italian rye may be used as a winter mixture, but needs to be sown each fall. Under some conditions redtop should be used to precede carpet grass. Carpet grass pastures should be grazed to their capacity, as under heavy grazing the best condition is maintained.

Bitterweed and dog fennel are the only two weeds that seriously invade carpet grass pastures. During the first two seasons these weeds should be mowed before they ripen seeds. Thereafter they will cause but little trouble, but mowing should be resorted to when necessary.

Seed of carpet grass is easily harvested by mowing and thrashing. Large areas of pure or nearly pure carpet grass occur in several regions in the South.

Up to the present the quantity of seed produced has been only a fraction of that required. A comprehensive plan has been devised to increase greatly the harvesting of seed, as the outstanding need to stimulate a much greater use of carpet grass for pasture is an ample seed supply.

Complete information about Carpet Grass is published in Farmers' Bulletin 1130-U. S. Department of Agriculture.

FINAL APPEAL TO FARMERS.

Columbia, April 11—A final appeal to the farmers of South Carolina to reduce their cotton acreage this year was issued today by the South Carolina Division of the American Cotton Association.

"We have given you the facts regarding the world surplus of cotton and we now leave the case with you," says a statement issued by the association. "If you go ahead and plant another full crop when there is already enough cotton on hand to supply the world for a year and a half, you will be making your own bed and will have to lie on it. We have done everything that we could possibly do to warn you and you will be walking into the trap with your eyes wide open."

"At the conferences held in Washington last week regarding the cotton situation it was the consensus of opinion that the only hope for the future of the South lies in a heavy reduction of the acreage. The New York bankers, the administration at Washington and the cotton experts all agreed that another large crop of cotton would mean financial ruin for the South.

"A heavy reduction in the acreage might result in our getting a much better price than now prevails for the cotton still on hand. A large crop means that the price will go much lower than it now is."

"If you can grow cotton at 6 cents a pound and make money at it, go to it. If you can't you had better plant food and feedstuffs this year."

A Little Vamp.

There is a girl in Delone,
The very cutest ever;
Her heart I fear is hard as stone,
But she is surely clever.
When dancing she is terpsichore;
Sings sweetly as a siren,
Glibly talks of Keats and Moore,
Of Tennyson and Byron.
Can wear her mother's hat of straw
Trimmed with faded posies;
But when she walks out her ecstacy
Makes it a wreath of roses.
With her fine eyes she makes a mash
Mountains it with fire phrases,
Until she finds you're short on cash,
Then you can go to ——— blazes.
But oh, the child is wondrous sweet,
And one can't help but love her;
From the shoes upon her dainty feet,
To the wreath that blooms above her.
